

Exception and the rule of law facing migrants

Convenor: Prof. João Pedroso (University of Coimbra)

The Democratic Rule of Law, in recent decades, has witnessed a politically passive to the replacement of Human Rights and Fundamental Rights by a Criminal State of Exception. The criminalization of political and social, the limitation of rights, the forms of criminal procedure of urgency and emergency, the new social control technologies follow the development of markets and neoliberal political principles by building a "Global Criminal Field Without State".

In what concerns to migration, with the intensification of migration on a global scale, European countries are tightening the restrictive and repressive laws. The objective of this workshop is to promote a debate on the rule of law and exception in Europe towards the problem of migrants, from the perspective of sociology of law and political sociology, exploring similarities and differences between countries and discussing the European policy.
